But how, it will be asked, are such improvements to be effected? Who has the power to make such alterations in the map of the city? We can hardly expect that either municipal or State legislation will come to our aid. The city government cannot now begin such improve-ments, and in view of the many divisions of property and the jealousy of property-owners, it is best, perhaps, that they should not. Individual efforts would doubtless lead to better and speedier re-tition.

Are there not among us men of sufficient intelligence and tasts to make Memphis something better than a monoton desert of brick and mortar? It is greatly to be hoped that the new sections of th city which are next to be built may be mapped out in a way that will truly relect the wealth, enterprise and culture of the people who will dwell therein.
